Poetry.
The Daisy.
Not words on water, in phantasm deep, Need we to pour a God is here—
The daisy fresh from winter's sleep, Tells of its hand in lines as clear.

For who but He who etched the skies, And painted the day springs living flood, Wondrous alike in all he tries, Could rear the daisy's purple bud?

Mould its green cup, its wiry stem, Its fringed border nicely spun,
And cut the gold-embossed gem, That, set in silver, gleams within?

And fling it untrammelled and free, O'er hill and dale and drier sod?
That man, where'er he walks, may see In every step the stamp of God.

Literature.
Love of Gambling Cured.

Monsieur X. was some descendant of a certain Marshal of France, and inherited from him a handsome fortune of some five hundred thousand francs. This is quite enough to live pleasantly in Paris, or, for that matter, anywhere else.

Of course, Monsieur X. was a mark for such mammas as had marriageable daughters; and, as the French mothers always manage these affairs themselves, and are, besides, thoroughly schooled in the ways of the world, Monsieur X. stood a very poor chance of escape. In fact, he did not escape, but was married one fine morning, to a pretty mademoiselle, who had the credit of possessing virtues, and whom our hero, (Monsieur X.) for a wonder did really love.

We mention it, as a greater reality on the other side of the water than this.

They lived happily through the honeymoon, and, much to the surprise of his friends, for a year or two afterward. But at length it was observed that he wore long sleeves, and dined frequently by himself at the Café de Paris, and did not smile at even the broadest of Grassot's comic acting. As he was known to be a young man of very correct habits, the inference was, (not always a just one, by the by,) that the wife was in the fault. The truth was, that with a disposition naturally amiable and yielding, she had been seduced by those married friends who know of her husband's resources, into an intense love of cards. As a natural consequence, she became eager for play, more in her habits, and petulant of manner. The husband bore this very quietly, resolving in his own mind what could be done, and paying his wife's drafts upon him without a murmur. Meanwhile days and weeks passed by, and the change wore grievously upon his spirits. At length he chose his course, and, pursued it, after this manner:—He entered with apparent gaiety into his wife's amusements, and introduced her, through the interposition of a friend into one of the most famous gambling saloons of Paris. As usual, she took her seat at the table where the stakes were the largest.—Her antagonist at the play was a stout old gentleman, who was a careless manner, but who, after the first round or two played with remarkable success. When madame's losses had amounted to a considerable sum, he proposed "double or quits." Madame accepted, and—lost!—The gentleman proposed the same game; madame accepted and lost!

The gentleman proposed the same trial a third and fourth time, and madame supposing him to be an eccentric old gentleman, who was willing to furnish her with this opportunity of winning again the money, accepted each time his proposal, and uniformly—lost. Still the play went on, until madame's losses amounted to the sum of four hundred thousand francs, when the old gentleman pleaded an engagement, and retired.

Madame X., in an agony of trepidation, gained her home, and, throwing herself at her husband's feet, confessed the folly which had ruined them. The husband was naturally astounded. "But," said he controlling his emotion, "the losses must be met.— There will remain some seventy thousand francs of my estate, and with that we can live comfortably in the country. For myself, I do not regret all this, but, my dear, for his old affection lingered—'I fear that you will sink under the privation, you must encounter.' His goodness overcame her, she avowed not only her willingness, but her great joy, in becoming the companion of his exile.

It was in an old town of Brittany that they lived quite cozily together, in a mossy chalet. Their table was frugally served, and their servants were of the neighboring peasantry; in place of the old joyous rides in the Boat de Boulogne, they now took strolls together under the wood that shaded the chalet. Thus for ten years enjoying into each other's a life, replete with the loss which had won to them a new enjoyment of life, and of each other's love.

"It was indeed, a happy loss," said she.
"It was none at all," said the husband, and with a caress, he handed her the certificates, for some five hundred thousand francs, in the most available French funds.

"Your antagonist," said he, "was a sure winner, but his services were purchased by your husband; and now that he has won you to his love, and to a sense of your own dignity, he makes over to you this recovered fortune."

The World Owes me a Living.
That's false, sir.—It doesn't owe you a farthing. You owe the world for the light of its day, the warmth of its sunshine, the beauty of its earth and sky, and for its loves, affections and friendships, which have from your childhood, young man, clustered around and hung to your worthless trunk. For all these and other countless numbers, you are a debtor.
You have never thanked God for health and life. You have never made the world better for your living. You owe for the breath you breathe and for the strength you enjoy. You haven't anything to your credit on the day-book or ledger of life—not a cent. You have never taken a dollar's stock in Heaven. You are a miserable, aimless, indolent bankrupt.
You float down the stream of your lazy existence like floodwood on water. Were you to sink to-day to oblivion, you would not leave a bubble.

The world owes you a living! Where is there a manly thought uttered, or a noble deed performed? Where are the evidence of your labor? Nowhere. You are lounging through life with your hands in your pockets, an idle loafer, swearing and slandering nonsense.
You drink, gamble and chase tobacco, but never earned your board. A pile of lumber would be of more account, for that can be worked into forms of usefulness and beauty; but you will not make anything of yourself, or allow society to do it. A world of such as you would be the place to live in indeed!— You have degraded our common manhood, instead of ennobling and elevating it, and in nothing but the form and vulgar speech, are you above the brutes that perish. And because you are too lazy to work, you claim that the world owes you a living!

No, sir; you owe the world a better life.
You never can pay all the debt, but you can do no better than commute for twenty-five cents on the dollar. Do, and say something noble and manly; labor for some honorable purpose, and not inhale God's pure air for nothing, and grunt through existence like a hog, having only two aims in life—to reach the bar and the dinner table; and only two attributes —to eat to gluttony, and drink to drunkenness.

The world owes no man such a living.

The Work of Creation.
The Creator has spoken, and the spangled stars look out from openings of deep unclouded blue; and as day rises, and the planet of morning pales in the east, the broken cloud-lets are transmitted from bronze into gold, and anon the gold becomes fire, and at length the glorious sun arises out of the seas, and enters on his course rejoicing. It is a brilliant day; the waves of a deeper and softer blue than before, and sparkle in the light; the earth, with little less to attract the gaze, has assumed a garb of brighter green; and as the sun declines and even richer glories than those which had enlivened his rising, the moon appears full orb'd in the east—the human eye the second great luminary in the heavens —and climbs slowly to the zenith as night advances, shedding its mild radiance on land and sea. Against the day breaks; the prospect consists, as before, of land and ocean. There are great pine woods, red covered swamps, plains, winding rivers, and broad lakes; and a bright sun shines over all. But the landscape derives its interest and novelty from a feature unmarked before. Gigantic birds stalk along the sands, or wade far into the waters in quest of the ichthyic food, while birds of lesser size float upon the lakes, or scream discordant in hovering flocks, thick as insects in the calan of a summer evening, over the narrower seas, or brighter with the sunlight gleam of their wings the thick woods. And ocean had its monsters, great "tannins" have their huge bulk over its surface to inhale the life-sustaining air; and out of their nostrils goeth smoke, as out of a "steaming pot or cauldron." Monstrous creatures, armed in massive scales, haunt the rivers, or scour the flat rank meadows; earth air and water are changed with animal life, and the sun sets on a busy scene in which warring instincts pursue unremittingly its few simple ends—the support and preservation of the individual, the propagation of species, and the protection and maintenance of the young.— Again the night descends, for the fifth day has closed, and morning breaks on the sixth and last day of creation. Cattle and beasts of the field graze on the plains; the thick-skinned rhinoceros wallows in the marshes; the squat hippopotamus rustles amongst the reeds, or plunges sulkily into the river; great herds of elephants seek their food amid the herbage of the woods; while animals of fiercer nature—the lion, the leopard, and the bear—harbor in deep caves till the evening, or lie in wait for their prey amid tangled thickets, or beneath some broken bank. At length, as the day wanes and the shadow lengthens, man, the responsible lord of the creation, formed in God's own image, is introduced upon the scene, and the work of creation ceases forever upon the earth.

The night falls once more upon the prospect, and there dawns yet another morning, the morrow of God's rest—that divine Sabbath in which there is no more creative power and which, "blessed and sanctified" beyond all that had gone before, has as its special object the moral elevation and final redemption of man. And over it no evening is represented in the record as falling, for its special work is not yet complete. Such seems to have been the sublime panorama of creation, exhibited in vision of old to

The shepherd who first taught the chosen seed, In the beginning, how the heavens and earth Rose out of chaos; and, rightly understood, I know not a single scientific truth that militates against even the most minute or least prominent of its details.— Hugh Miller's "Testimony of the Rocks."

Twenty Years in the Life of a Woman. and Queen.

On the 30th day of June 1837, our Most Gracious Queen ascended the throne of Great Britain; this day exactly completes the cycle of twenty years since the commencement of her reign. To-day then, we are on a momentary platform, we may be permitted to glance over the ocean of events which have filled up the measure of these two decades. Never before have the pages of history recorded a period of such continuous prosperity, or so steady and unbroken power—moral, material and intellectual—of such expansion in wealth, energy and capabilities in any nation, as in these twenty years in England. The wisest statesman felt an unconscious dread, the most conservative saw an unexplained danger in the fact of a maiden Queen, on whose head suddenly eighteen summers had shone, assuming the sceptre of the freest country in the world. A generation has been born since then, and is now competent to give its own verdict of this unparalleled reign. Old men have been gathered to their fathers, blessing the Providence which elected so vir-tuous a sovereign to the head of the people.
We who survive may challenge with confidence and self-congratulation a comparison with other forms of Government, whether these be ancient or modern.

To appreciate fully the value of Victoria's peaceful and beneficent reign, we should also look to France and other European states comparing their condition with our own. Revolutions, conspiracies, and a muzzled press, are not signs of happiness and content.

Twenty years make up a large portion of ordinary human life; and it is public so in her household—our Maid, our Wife, and our Mother—our Queen has given to the world an ennobling type of womanhood. Her example—but we say the pen, for who does not recognize her worth! May we not best express our sense of it, by praying that her Majesty's life may long be spared; and as the clouds which lowered over the commencement of our Sovereign's rule soon broke away before the sunshine, so the same blessings may be vouchsafed to her and hers, in the fullness of time she reposes with her ancestors in the stately vaults of Windsor.

The origin of the fire is not explained, but it is said that one of the chimneys had been on fire, and that a spark from that may have caught the woodwork.

Dr. Gray and his assistants were cool and energetic in the emergency. They hope to provide for the patients, but as the Asylum was crowded, any provisions must be inconvenient.

The damage to the building can hardly amount to less than $200,000.

Dr. L. F. Rose was seriously if not fatally burned.

The fire at the Lunatic Asylum has been subdued. That part of the building occupied by the patients was little damaged, and none of the patients were injured. No additional accommodations will be required for them immediately, and one of the attending physicians says they will be all as comfortable by to-morrow night as they were before the fire. That part of the front of the Asylum which was immediately behind the colonnade, and which was occupied by the resident physicians, contained the chapel, dining-room, &c., was destroyed by the fire.

The Pilot Roy who ran the steamer Canadian ashore on the Pillars, has been sentenced to be deprived of his branch for life.

Difficulty is expected in the Indian country, when the Agent goes up to pay the Sicout's annuities.

The crop of sugar in Porto Rico is a million of pounds more this year than it was in 1856, molasses 220,000 gallons more, coffee 300,000 pounds more.

The Free Will Baptists of Michifan have expelled a deacon from their church because he voted last November for Mr. Buchanan.

The grasshoppers that have threatened to destroy the crops in upper Minnesota have been killed by the recent cold and wet weather. It is said that bushes of dead grasshoppers, in masses, may be seen dead on the prairies.

The Comet.—The Glasgow Daily Mail, noticing the Comet furor, says a learned clergyman, not ten miles from that city, at a prayer meeting of his flock during the week, took an affecting farewell of them in a very pathetic manner.

The Cleveland Herald says that on Sunday, the 28th ult., while the clergyman was officiating in the Columbia Parish St. Philip's Church, Strongsville, was struck with lightning, and considerable damage done to the building. With one or two exceptions, the people assembled escaped unhurt.

We regret to learn that the wheat midge has made its appearance throughout this country, and that the farmers are apprehensive its ravages will be as extensive as in former years. Never did all kinds of crops present a more promising appearance,
